Understanding the practice of Independent Fact-finding Investigations in India

Ankita Pandey

Assistant Professor, Department of Political Science
Indraprastha College for Women, University of Delhi

Ankita Pandey is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science, Indraprastha College for Women, University of Delhi. She has recently submitted her doctoral thesis at the University of Oxford. Her thesis is a study of the practices of civil rights groups in Indian politics as a distinct form of collective action. It examines the key aspects—composition, location, tactics, internal debates and collective identity—of civil rights groups in India during 1960s-1980s. She is principally interested in Indian politics, social movements and civil society in India.
